Circulation Where Books Are Sold

Why it Pays to Advertise on The Book Page of The Chicago Daily News

The Chicago Daily News has a daily circulation of 400,000, of which 94 per cent is concentrated in Chicago and the immediate suburbs.

The Daily News circulation is in the heart of the market. It is a simple matter for Mr. or Mrs. Chicago to go immediately, while the buying-impulse is fresh, and make their purchases in one of the many large book-stores. The books are at hand.

And it is not only the habitual literary-fans among this enormous city circulation who read The Book Page. The most casual readers enjoy and are influenced by the breezy informality of its style—its "Personal Touch."

Publishers recognize the efficacy of The Book Page as a medium. They place the bulk of their Chicago advertising in The Daily News as a matter of course.

Here is the comparative lineage in all Chicago newspapers for the first nine months of 1921.

The Daily News	(6 days)	47,861 lines
Tribune	(7 days)	43,132 "
Herald-Examiner	(7 days)	12,817 "
Post	(6 days)	29,573 "
American	(6 days)	466 "

The Daily News circulation strikes home in 400,000 homes every night and reaches approximately 1,200,000 readers. The Book Page sells good books.

Mother

By

Maxim Gorky

Here's a novel that registers 100% in timeliness. It is Gorky's acknowledged masterpiece and in its amazing pages he has gathered the whole soul of the great struggle against the Czar's autocracy. All eyes are turned toward Russia; and her greatest living novelist has laid bare in this amazing, passionate book the early years of the terrifying strife which finally led to the reign of Bolshevism. Charles Edward Russell has written an absorbingly interesting introduction in which he says that here "Russia stands forth in a flood of light." $2.00 net.

Lloyd Osbourne's STORIES OF THE SOUTH SEAS are stories that waft to readers all the glamor and enchantment of the marvelous islands, which the author knows from long and intimate life among the natives. Illustrated.

Wild Justice

By

Lloyd Osbourne

Tales of poignant drama, some tragic, some with distinctive humor. Mostly they deal with the adventures of westerners, outcasts flung into the round of savage life. Lloyd Osbourne is Robert Louis Stevenson's stepson. $2.50 net.

"In Blessed Cyrus" is winning much approval for its crisp humor and the lively pace at which it tells the chronicle of what happened to a sleepy, quaint village when a flashing, dashing actress appeared in its midst, bringing upheaval to hearts and fortunes. Mrs. Richards writes with all her accustomed spirit and the story she tells runs a cheerful, happy course. The characters are delightfully quaint and amusing that you meet in Cyrus, and smiles and laughs are what readers everywhere are greeting them with. $2.00 net.

Marriage and the Moon-Calf

The Briary Bush by Floyd Dell

THE story of a modern marriage in which two rebellious young lovers try to keep their mutual freedom. They escape from the traditional bondage which they fear, only to find that freedom has perils and disappointments of its own. Their efforts to solve their problems, and their inevitable misunderstandings—not only of each other, but of themselves—make a true and enlightening picture of a transition stage in young American life. The effect of new ideas upon an eager new generation is dramatically and dispassionately shown in this history of Felix Fay's adventures in Chicago.

The Americanization of Edward Bok has responded in remarkable fashion to the issuance of a $3.00 edition, demonstrating that the author and the publishers were right in their conviction that there was a much larger buying public awaiting a lower-priced edition. Booksellers who have exhausted their stocks are reordering on a heavier scale than ever.

There seems to be no natural limit to the public for this many-sided book. It has reached a point now where its influence is rapidly being extended through the lecture room and the schools.

A book of this type, when it becomes established in popular favor, achieves a substantial and lasting success which far outranks that of a fiction "best seller."

"The Americanization of Edward Bok" will be one of the outstanding serious books for the holiday gift season. Have you a stock to last?

Everybody will be anxious to own the book that answers every question about Woodrow Wilson

OUR War President's Administration was the most important since Lincoln's day. More thousands of individuals are interested in facts about Woodrow Wilson than about any other living man. No man is so qualified to speak out the truth—fact for fact—about Mr. Wilson as his former Secretary,

Joseph P. Tumulty

Mr. Tumulty's human account of Woodrow Wilson's administration is written in an impartial manner; he gives the facts as he sees them and lets the reader draw his own conclusions whether of praise or blame.

This book has already roused wide interest. It is attracting nation wide attention in the daily press. There will continue to be more discussion about it than of any other book of the season. Its title is cretions" of the Irish-American delegates prevented Wilson from aiding Ireland at the Peace Conference.

He tells why Wilson made his ill-fated tour for the League after his return from Paris.

Childrens' Book Week

November 13-19

Local Author Interest

THE Canadian book-trade has a very sound idea in urging its publishers and booksellers to give special attention to the promotion of books by Canadian authors during the week of November 19th-26th. Such a widespread movement gives authors a chance for a better hearing in their own communities and it puts back of book-distribution the enthusiasm and co-operation of a great many people who would otherwise have no special interest in bookstores.

It is certainly, but just due to the person who, by hard work, has been able to produce something that has justified its way into print to have some recognition from those among whom he or she lives or in the community where his early life was spent. The timeliness of making this emphasis in November is that it gives opportunity for people to select these books to send to friends at a distance, thus representing the community from which the gift comes.

Booksellers in the United States are urged by the Year Round Bookselling Committee to take thought of this same idea in their own communities. No date for such emphasis could be more appropriate than Thanksgiving week, in which this Canadian Week, falls. Thanksgiving week always has an "old home" aspect which would make an emphasis on local authors particularly easy to accomplish. It is also a week when selling has not reached its height, and there is opportunity for some special emphasis. If local booksellers will take hold of this opportunity to give special emphasis to the authors of the state or city in which they are located, they will find a very ready response, and there is also likely to be opportunity for special publicity in the local press, as such a movement would have particular appeal. The gift aspect should not be forgotten, as people who have read a book may be ready to use several for gifts, and those who like their gifts to have special individual flavor could turn in no better direction than toward the books of local authors.

Periodicals and Book Prices

SOMEHOW the increasing tendency to use the high favorites among current books to boost the circulation of magazines brings to mind the old story of the traveling suffrage advocate who encountered Aunt Amanda of Saco Valley just as she was coming out of the barn laden with full milk pails, some chicken feed and a few other signs of chores accomplished. After she had paused long enough to hear the argument in favor of suffrage and the request for her signature of support, she picked up her pails again with the remark, "Wal, all I kin say is if there is one leastest little thing these men can do by themselves, I say let 'em do it."

In meeting the problems of distribution, the magazine publishers, during the last twenty years, have shown themselves to be masters of the art. Their merchandise is everywhere and in everyone's hand. In getting this countrywide distribution, the book publishers, by comparison to magazine publishers, have only begun to find their field.

It would, then, seem as tho circulation getting was a thing the periodicals "could do all by themselves," and they ought to do it that way. When they take advantage of the popularity of a book to increase their circulation by cutting the price of that book, it is putting on the book-trade a burden that it has no right to bear. Usually the method is to offer the book and the periodical at a price total lower than the two would regularly cost. This is not unfair, because almost everyone realizes that the discount is coming off the price of the magazine. Sometimes, however, periodical publishers obtain such low rates on the books, that they offer books and periodical together for less than the books alone are regularly advertised at. This is certainly giving everyone the impression that the bookseller must be making an exorbitant profit when he gets the full price.

Someone says why don't booksellers in their turn offer to sell books and magazines in combination and make reductions? One reason is that the Court has decided that for a dealer to sell a magazine at lower than the price authorized by the publisher is illegal because he is not delivering a piece of merchandise but entering a contract for the publisher of the magazine which the publisher of the magazine has to fulfill by mailing succeeding issues. The other reason is that, while the increase of magazine circulation brings in later results of advertising, there is no advertising by-product on the book, and again the bookseller is handicapped.

From the point of view of the publisher of the book, his interest is in getting cheap advertising space at the time when his general promotion campaign is going on. This is probably sound reasoning, especially when the price at which the book is offered by the periodical has some reasonable relation to what it is sold for in the bookstore, as, for instance, the selling of Wells's, one volume "Outline of History" plus the Review of Reviews for $7.50.

The wrong impression comes when two books like Wells's "Outline of History" in two volumes plus "Queen Victoria" are offered by the New Republic for $14 plus a year's subscription, while the books alone, according to the publishers' advertisements to the public, are worth $15.50.

The current book and subscription combination of the New Republic show the following fluctuation:

Subscription price of New Republic	$5.00
Subs. ordered with a copy of Weyl's "Tired Radicals"	3.60
Subs. with Irwin's "The Next War"	3.50
Subs. with Angell's "Fruits of Victory".	2.75
Subs. with Strachey's "Queen Victoria" ..	2.00
Subs. with Well's "The Outline of History"	.30

The public naturally concludes that the bookseller must have too wide a margin, a deduction which is not justified by the circumstances.

Sound growth in the field of book publishing will depend on sound methods of distribution being fully established. Anything that fundamentally undermines the public's confidence in the bookstore is undermining the important movements now under way for better book conditions in this country.

The Washington Conference

THE importance to the book-trade of the great November Conference at Washington has been already emphasized, but booksellers should remember that not only in the opening days but from then on thru the winter, the subjects that this event brings to the front will be of continued interest. In fact, the interest ought to augment as the weeks go by and as people turn from the fevered debates in the papers to the more substantial discussion on politics, personalities and problems in the pages of books. There is no phase of the Disarmament subject, the problems of the Pacific, of navies, of past policies, etc., that is not covered in books that are on the bookseller's shelves or can be quickly brought to his counters. There can be practically a whole winter's emphasis on these subjects, not only for the improvement of the book business and not primarily for that, but because it will bring the right material for judgment into the hands of the people, where public opinion, after all, will be a great deciding factor in events. It will be an occasion for emphasizing, also, that for the student who wishes to see all around the question there is no escape from the book, as neither the newspaper nor the periodical can give fully reasoned arguments on important subjects. November begins a notable opportunity for every bookshop.

Book Cloth Advertising

THE competition between the two leading houses in the field of book cloth manufacture has led to some very effective and interesting advertising in the general cause of books. The Interlaken people have been carrying large display space in book mediums, giving specific advertising to such titles as had been bound in the Interlaken cloth. The Holliston Mills is on its side issuing a very neatly printed 6-page leaflet, which it is sending to dealers for free distribution. It is headed, "Choice Books For Your Library Shelf. Choose One Each Week." The folder then lists in very neat form some of the leading books of the year (as are bound in Holliston cloths) with a 2 or 3-line comment from some review.

Such competition, emphasizing the books themselves, ought to lead booksellers as well as ultimate users of books to have more interest in the bindings of books and have a general tendency toward improving the standards in cloth bindings, and in this way provide a very interesting development in trade promotion.

Allied Interests of Librarians and Booksellers

By A. A. Kroch

*An address before the 25th Annual Conference of the Illinois Library Association, at Urbana, October 11th.

WHEN I was asked to give a talk before the Illinois Library Association I felt greatly honored as well as embarrassed. Honored, not only in person, but as a member of the time-honored bookselling profession whose ideals so closely coincide with those of a librarian; embarrassed, because I am to speak about the allied interests of booksellers and librarians. While I believe I know something about bookselling, my knowledge of library work is of necessity very limited; and I ask your indulgence if I should dwell upon subjects and problems which long ago have been successfully solved by you.

At the outset I wish to distinguish between the library as an accumulation of books, arranged according to a certain approved system and kept for the use of the student, and the public library whose primary object is to bring literature and a love for the higher things in life to the masses. The former is more or less a question of administration and of that admirable library technique so masterfully developed in this country. The libraries' effort is completeness within a more or less highly specialized field.

A Co-operative Catalog

Bacon calls them, "The shrines where all the relics of saints, full of true virtue and that without delusion or imposture, are preserved and reposed." They are indispensable to the brain worker, the historian, and inventor. Since their main object is to collect everything worth while on certain subjects, I believe that the larger libraries could well combine in publishing a catalog of their possessions for the use of booksellers as well as their own use and I believe that several hundred booksellers in the United States and abroad would gladly pay their share to defray the cost of publishing such a catalog, as this would enable them to make intelligent offers. The general catalog could be supplemented by quarterly lists of additions, special wants, and duplicates.

I can see in such a bulletin a nucleus of a scientific library quarterly established along practical lines and self-sustaining almost from the beginning. It is needless to say that such a catalog would be of great value to the libraries themselves as well as to the student; and while I know that the publication of a catalog for library use was under discussion this plan might pave a way for its practical execution.

While the college and reference libraries stand proudly aloof, their democratic sisters, the public libraries are more approachable. Their main strength is not only the store of books but it is the librarian. She or he must be the modern magician who is able to unloosen the dormant thoughts, to open doors to millions of men and women, to offer them, "that chance encounter with a book which has marked the awakening of life." And here I can speak of both the librarian and the bookseller, as similar is their effort.

The librarian, as well as the bookseller, is not born but is a product of cultivation. He must learn from his early youth that "The book is the only immortality"; that they are the only good friends who will never fail you, whom you can share and not lose. As Miss Bessie Graham quotes in her admirable "Bookman's Manual": "He (the librarian, and obviously the bookseller) must know his books, not much in a few books but a little in all the books, all the journals, book catalogs, many pamphlets and all newspapers which come to the library. With him there can be no question of what to read. He must read it all; not all of all he sees but a little of everything he sees. Any worker in any library or bookstore who does not read, read, and forever read, cannot hope for and cannot expect notable success."

Three Cardinal Points

But reading is not all. He must become enthusiastic about the books which appeal to him and be able to share this enthusiasm.

One. Know your books,

Two. Become enthusiastic over them,

Three. Transmit this enthusiasm to your readers,—

These are the cardinal points of the successful librarian and bookseller.

The librarian has one great advantage over the bookseller. The dealer's attitude towards the public is often times considered to be influenced by mercenary motives. May his enthusiasm be ever so genuine, the business part throws a shadow over his best efforts. The librarian's motives are unselfish and recognized as such. The highest point a bookseller may ever reach is the unreserved confidence of the public. The librarian must be accessible and not "behind a wire netting." He must be willing to render assistance cheerfully. He must be a "highbrow" without showing it. He has the power to mold the taste of the public and he must wield this power with discretion and discrimination. A child is in its teacher's hands for a number of years, but the further development may be greatly influenced by the librarian and the bookseller, particularly so in these United States where the character of our people is such a peculiar conglomeration of cold reasoning and emotional sentimentalism, where, swayed by impulses, we are ready to accept judgment without logical reasoning.

The great responsibility resting upon the librarian as well as the bookseller would naturally require a peculiarly fitted training to hold these positions of influence. The splendid work of the American Library Association offers certain guarantees, providing that the library graduate realizes that the mere library technique should not overshadow the real object of the librarian, to bring literature and the public in close harmony. The booksellers present-day training is wanting in many respects; in fact, the public has no guarantee whatsoever.

In a talk before the American Booksellers' Association I endeavored to impress my hearers with the importance of bringing up a crop of properly-trained booksellers, and I believe that library and bookselling schools could well be combined for mutual benefit. There should be formed regular university courses which would entitle the successful graduate to a degree of a B. C. "Book Counsellor." Lawyers and judges have attended the same schools,—why not librarians and booksellers?

Long and assiduous are the preparations to become a successful bookseller or librarian! But what are the rewards? The bookseller, who must also be endowed with sound business intuition, can always find remunerative employment, and there are thousands of opportunities in small and larger towns waiting for him if he chooses to start a bookstore of his own. His success will depend upon his will to succeed, by offering service. He must become a cultural factor and not merely a shop-keeper. He must enforce the public's recognition of his honest efforts, and commercial success is bound to follow.

A Campaign For Librarians

But how about the librarian, what are his prospects? A few well paid positions in the large cities; perhaps a connection with a business house; what else,—I do not know. And why? Because the public has not been awakened to the great importance of the librarian as an educational factor and therefore does not recognize, nor sufficiently reward, the service rendered by the librarian.

The public does not seem to realize that the librarian is to a library what a general is to an army, that without him the library is "but a land of shadows." It should show itself so generous to the librarian that no other call would tempt him.

There should be started a great campaign on behalf of librarians and booksellers, not merely of books. The public must be told loudly and persistently that it needs proper guidance for its reading, and that librarians and booksellers are their natural guides. But how to advertise those facts: First, thru interesting press notices of a well organized publicity committee consisting of representatives of librarians and booksellers. Second, thru lectures in clubs and societies. Third, thru forming library clubs. Fourth, thru publishers' advertisements. Every town could have a library club composed of its leading citizens. The nominal dues would enable the librarian to publish, in co-operation with the local bookseller, a monthly book bulletin, entertainingly edited, either printed or mimeographed. It would discuss new books, book gossip, list not only actual additions to the library but also new books obtainable thru the local bookseller, give short book reviews, written either by the librarian or by club members. This bulletin could eventually become a medium for interchange of opinion, a field for literary aspirations and would increase the esteem of literary efforts and the community would be bound to recognize the librarian's beneficial influence.

The local bookseller and the librarian should mutually advise each other. The librarian must not be tempted by lower rates of a distant dealer but should patronize the local bookseller, as the service would greatly offset the small savings on the price of the books. I believe also that the librarian should use every opportunity to impress the public with the value of a home library. A small slip might be inserted in each book, suggesting to the reader that if he enjoyed the book and wanted to read it again and again he might buy it either for himself or as a gift to a friend.

Books and Americanization

A successful main street publisher suggested even the advisability of librarians offering books for sale, but this I believe would be a grave error, as such a combination would become most detrimental to the library profession, lessening its prestige with the public.

The great wave of "Americanization" sweeping the country has its best ally in the librarian, but forced assimilation is useless. The old Latin saying, "Ubi bene, ibi patria," holds good. We must make the immigrant feel that he is welcome, must not slight nor ridicule his alien view upon things, must make him feel at home, let him at first read books in his native tongue, then offer translations from our literature, all the time holding out the direct practical advantage of a mental assimilation. There are many European countries whose century-old efforts at assimilation of immigrant elements have utterly failed because the soul of the immigrant remained undisclosed, while in this country the second generation is assimilated practically without exception, because, until now, forced methods were ignored. Good books, carefully chosen, are the best assimilants. If we insist that the immigrant forget the language in which his mother sang him to sleep, the tales he heard, and the books he read in his early youth, if we make an enforced attempt to make him read books still foreign to him, we will make him "Loathe the sight of a book all the rest of his life."

"After all, there is but one race—humanity," said George Moore, and I may add "but one means of understanding—thru literature." I will repeat with Channing that, "The diffusion of these silent teachers—books—thru the whole community is to work greater effects than artillery, machinery, and legislation. Its peaceful agency is to supersede stormy revolutions. The culture which it is to spread, whilst an unspeakable good to the individual, is also to become the stability of nations."

When the educated immigrant, and these are fully as needed as the mere work-horses, comes to town he pays an early visit to the local bookstore to purchase a grammar to study English, and if he finds a few books in his native language then he at once feels at home. He displays proudly his knowledge of his own literature; and, since his purse is usually meager to buy the books, he inquires if he can get them at the library. There he becomes a steady visitor, and if the library meets him but half way and shows real interest in his mental development it will gain a potential factor in the cultural progress of the country.

Every library can, at a relatively small expenditure of money for books in foreign languages, do more good than tons of ink wasted in writing about artificial methods of Americanization. The experienced librarian will agree with me that those readers of foreign books eventually become readers of the best in our own literature.

The important problem confronting the librarian is the economical purchase of new books, and here is where the local bookseller can be of greatest assistance. The alert bookseller keeps himself informed on the new publications, usually knowing them before the librarian reads about them. If the librarian makes it a part of his task to meet the bookseller at least once a week to discuss the new books with him, to keep posted on the public's preferences, to look over the books before he buys them, to borrow them—yes, to borrow them from him for closer examination—then the slight increase in price which he may pay by buying from the local bookstore and not from a distant "price cutter," is well expended for the benefit of his reading public. He gets first hand information, can then much more intelligently follow the book reviews, will sense the demand of the public, and be prepared to answer the many questions of the public as to why this or that book is or is not on the shelves. This contact with bookseller is the missing link between the public and the library, and is often a nucleus of a most elevating personal friendship by which the public is the greatest gainer.

For the bookseller those half hours with the librarian are most inspiring. He forgets his cares, his bills, and discounts. He discovers their affinity for each other by the mutual love they have for a book, and feels with Browning:

"We get no good
By being ungenerous, even to a book
And calculating profits—so much help
By so much reading. It is rather when
We gloriously forget ourselves and plunge
Soul-forward, headlong into a book's profound
Impassioned for its beauty and salt of truth
'Tis then we get the right good from a book."

Price-Cutting Again

ALTHO the bitter days of reckless price-slashing are past history, the subject must, every once in a while, come to the front for frank discussion. When the general impulse toward price-cutting in all lines last winter was at its height, there was a good deal of fear that books would be included in the general demonstration. This, however, proved not to be the case, and the bookstores have proceeded steadily to turn their stocks into sales.

The fall brings new discussion, as usual tracing back to that ever present source of irritation, the cutting of the Macy department store in New York. Practically everyone had retired from the cutting of books, except Macy, leaving them, as they would wish, alone in the field. As it has been pointed out many times and emphasized in Macy's own advertising, the cutting of books is considered as a demonstration to the consumer that prices in all departments are equally advantageous. The only way to demonstrate price cutting to the public is in the field of identifiable merchandise. Nobody knows whether ash barrels at $5.67, Swiss watches at $14.89 or boots at $8.89 are lower than the other stores' or not. There is no way to compare, and the person who has not looked a large emporium over from that point of view does not realize how few items there are in the huge stock that are of this easily identifiable character.

The great trophy of Macy Company's history is the check of $165,000 obtained from the publishers when they joined to cut off the supply a dozen years ago, an expensive effort, but one that perhaps paid, as it set many people thru-out the country thinking about the unsoundness of the cut price method. For some time after that decision, Macy's purchasing was largely thru the jobbers till finally one publisher after another, feeling that if he did not do it the other man would and thereby get heavier sales, began to open up direct business with the department, and now all publishers deal with the Macy department. This gives Macy a slightly wider margin for operating and helps set the stage for the next event.

Until recently Macy & Co. have had close relations with Abraham & Strauss of Brooklyn, but they are now quite separate and keenly competitive. Abraham & Strauss have a good book department on the mezzanine floor of perhaps twenty-five to thirty-five per cent of the Macy department volume. During October they decided to meet the Macy prices, which are usually about ten per cent and a penny less than the list. Macy sent word to the various publishers that if Abraham & Strauss did not cease meeting Macy prices, they, Macy, would go six per cent better. This sets up a situation, whereby, having fined the publishers and served as a menace to good book merchandising for a number of years, they would like to have the publishers put forth their efforts to keep them in sole preeminence in price-cutting.

Nothing much can be said to such a request, and in the meantime two Newark stores have given the same challenge. The threat of the situation is put on a wider basis as Macy & Company use the two national mediums, the Nation and the Independent, to advertise books at their new scale of sixteen per cent off.

The trade will now have to keep its head or it will be launched in a fruitless controversy leading to the reduction in the sales and output of books. The trade has shown signs of keeping its head in the last few years and may be expected to do so now.

The general principles involved should be kept clearly in mind: First, that the public, who are to be first considered, do not gain from price-cutting. Volumes of evidence could be brought to this argument, not only from this country but from every country that has sold books, Germany, France, England. The prices of books must be affected by the size of the distribution, and when distribution is curtailed prices will rise. Second, books are sold to dealers at a rate that will show a margin of profit, but not if they give the profit away. The price-cutter, according to his own advertisements, uses this cutting to build business in other departments, thereby securing ultimate profit. Third, the department store is somewhat on trial. The standards in department store merchandising have moved forward steadily in the last twenty years, and the practices of 1900 are generally not the practices of today. The fact that such great book departments as those of Wanamaker, Marshall Field, Jordan Marsh & Company, to name but a few, are maintaining a sound business without price-cutting shows the present tendency. It can hardly be expected, however, that the whole group of merchants should move along side by side, and it may be some time before the standards of the best are the standards of all. Fourth, it is well for the health of publishing that there be a variety of outlets, and there have been more bookshops appearing in the last couple of years than book departments.

The facts of the situation should be kept fully before the trade so that they may not be moved too much by rumors and counter-rumors. There is every reason to think that the epidemic may die of its own lack of food.

Bookman Week at Wanamakers

AN experiment in the promotion of books of more than usual interest was undertaken at Wanamaker's New York store during the past week, conducted by John Farrar, Editor of the Bookman. There were six daily programs under the general heading of "The Bookman's Literary Week."

Wanamaker's beautiful auditorium holding twenty-five hundred people was filled to overflowing with people who had been attracted by the program. Mr. Farrar introduced the opening meeting by emphasizing that to the Bookman's way of thinking there was today "something distinctly new in a literary way in America and that the Bookman was interested to do its part to help create a general public interest in the fact that creative writing of unusual value and originality was coming forward." This same point was again emphasized in the opening session, when Owen Johnson, author of "The Wasted Generation," made an admirable talk on "The Effect of War on Literature," in closing which he said that he believed we were "right on the threshold of a great forward movement in American literature."

On the Monday program Heywood Brown was the first writer to be introduced, speaking on "Ten Novels of the Year." He said that he had begun his writing as a reporter but had been happy when he was allowed to include drama and books in his newspaper work, especially when he found that very often literature preceded life rather than life literature, or, as he humorously put it, after Ibsen had written "The Doll's House" one could hardly travel in Norway without hearing the doors slam behind women who were "walking out into the night."

The ten books he reviewed were: "Alice

Adams," "The Three Soldiers," "The Beginning of Wisdom," "The Girls," "Messer Marco Polo," "The Blood of the Conquerors," "Mr. Waddington of Wyck," "Dangerous Ages," "Hagar's Hoard," "If Winter Comes."

Alexander Black contributed one of his delightfully wise and humorous talks; Henry Aikman, author of "Zell," spoke on "The Epidemic of the Young Novelist"; Blanche Coulton Williams gave an estimate of the present short story writers of the day; and Fanny Hurst added further brilliance to the afternoon.

A very much applauded feature was a burlesque entitled "What Is Your Dangerous Age?" written around the characters in Rose Macaulay's new novel "Dangerous Ages" by Otto Liveright and Beatrice Kaufman.

On Tuesday there was a discussion of "The Younger Generation in Literature" by John Erskine, Henry Canby, Stephen Vincent Benét, John V. A. Weaver, Dorothy Speare, Dana Burnet, Donald Ogden Stewart, Henry Sell, Robert Duffus and John Bishop. The Marionette Theater presented "Orlando Furioso"; Joseph Lincoln talked about Cape Cod characters.

Wednesday was "Travel Day" with "The Cruise of the Kawa" and a dance by Margaret Severn; speeches by Harry Franck, the two Greenbies, Frederick O'Brien, Arthur Guiterman, Hector MacQuarrie.

On Thursday "The Provincetown Players" appeared in Susan Glaspell's "Trifles"; a showing of part of a film and a talk about its production by Rita Weiman; talks by Teresa Helburn of the Theater Guild, Frank Crane, Joseph Schildkraut, Eva LeGallienne and Cornelia Otis

Skinner—the latter about Blasco Ibáñez and "Blood and Sand."

The Friday program will be postponed to Monday on account of Armistice Day. On Monday there will be folk songs of the nations; a group of American Poets will read or speak; a scene from Sidney Howard's "Swords," by Clare Eames will be given.

On Saturday "Children's Book Day": a fantasy given by a company of children under the direction of Eleanor Schorer; a discussion of children's books by Annie Carroll Moore; and stories and talks by some of their favorite authors. Palmer Cox, of "Brownie" fame, and Celett Burgess were present, as were Algernon Tassin, William Heyliger, Anna Cogswell Tyler and others.

Mr. Farrar has announced that it is possible that this idea of a bookman's literary week may be carried out elsewhere. Certainly as an effective means of getting books to the attention of a large and alert audience, the occasion was a striking success, and Mr. Farrar and Mr. Smyth of the Wanamaker book department should be given high credit for so carefully and thoroly developed a plan.

Good Book-Making

IF attractiveness of make-up is to affect sales and persuade people toward the pleasures of book purchasing and book giving, there will be more purchases decided on on this basis during the coming month than is often the case. One of the features of the year's book-making is the versatility shown, so that one finds books of greatly varying fields, each accurately fitted to a suitable format.

The make-up of A. Edward Newton's new volume of essays, "A Magnificent Farce," was naturally patterned on the previous volume of Mr. Newton's, and there could hardly be a format more suitable. The brown cover with buckram back, paper label and gilt top make a book that will take a dignified place in a booklover's library. The illustrations, as before, have been drawn from most interesting sources, and the frontispiece is a colored reproduction of a water color by Blake. One of the illustrations which will make particular appeal to the bookseller is the photograph of four distinguished American collectors, including William Harris Arnold, so active in American bookselling affairs, his companions in the picture being W. F. Gable of Altoona, R. B. Adam of Buffalo, and Chauncey B. Tinker of Yale. Then there is a picture of Christopher Morley, of whom Mr. Newton says, "I have prophesied for 'Parnassus on Wheels' such fame as is now enjoyed by 'Travels With A Donkey.'"

The Atlantic Monthly Press are also responsible for an exquisite little volume, the presswork of which has been done by Mr. Uppike at the Merrymount Press. This is "Many Children," a volume of verses by Mrs. Schuyler Van Rensselaer, illustrated with drawings by Florence Wyman Ivins. The charm with which the illustrations have been fitted to the pages and kept in harmony with the text makes it a volume of wonderful daintiness and a fine example of what can be done with a book of that size.

Another volume of poetry that is attractive in both type-page and general appearance is Gerald Gould's volume published by the Yale University Press entitled "The Journey." The peculiar experiment of this book is the binding of it in gilt paper with a black label gilt lettered on the side. The result is daring but effective.

In quite different size is "The Songs of Cowboys," a new volume in the series of anthologies that Houghton Mifflin has been publishing. This volume is compiled by one who knows the cowboy, N. Howard Thorpe. The brilliant yellow sides of the book are effectively lettered in black with an outline silhouette of a cowboy in action. Size and shape are most suitable for a book with this appeal.

The Century Company has made more than one good addition to its series of travel imprints, one of the most attractive being "The Adventures of Swazi Land" by Owen Rowe O'Neil. It is an octavo book similar in style to the famous O'Brien volumes and the interesting photographs are carefully reproduced. There is bound to be a continuation of the revival in travel reading as long as interesting volumes such as this one come to hand.

A travel book of great beauty covering our own country comes from Scribner, "The Westward Ho-boes" by Winifred H. Dixon, a handsome octavo. The photographs deserve special commendation. Seldom have we seen more beautiful and effective photographs of our Western country, and not many travel books show pictures with such real camera art.

An art book in a restricted field but of unusual beauty in manufacture is "The Art and Artists of Indiana" by Mary Q. Burnet, published by Century Company. The book is one of those volumes that open perfectly to the hand on account of the careful selection of paper, and the many illustrations in brown tint are admirably reproduced and give a remarkable impression of what one hundred years of art progress have done in that state. The blue binding with gilt top are in dignified harmony with the printing. Some of the illustrations that may have special interest to the book-trade are the reproduction of Wayman Adams's portrait of Booth Tarkington, Robert Grafton's portrait of George Ade, Myra Richards's bust of James Whitcomb Riley, and a very interesting reproduction of the fine portrait work of Ruth Pratt Bobbs, wife of the president of Bobbs-Merrill Company.

We have had many fine books in the field of furniture and its history but none of more beauty than "The Furniture of the Pilgrim Century" by Wallace Nutting, now published by Marshall Jones Company. The book is quite largely one of photographs, as there can be no way to describe a piece of furniture so fully as by a photograph, and each style of furniture is traced thru a great many variations. Both text and pictures are printed in a slightly brown ink on tinted stock, and this combination brings out the photographs in great beauty. There is a substantial and appropriate cloth binding and it has been sewed so that it runs pleasantly thru the hand. This is one of the most ambitious pieces of book-making of the year.

F. A. Stokes & Company have used a fine series of colored illustrations by Paul Branson to make a very attractive and beautiful collection of fables entitled "An Argosy of Fables." Mr. Branson's work in the field of animals is well known, and the presswork has been very carefully planned to offer an adequate complement to the large collection of pictures.

N. C. Wyeth's new pictures for the Scribner series of juveniles are those for the "Scottish Chiefs," and it makes another remarkable addition to the extensive list that Mr. Wyeth has worked on. The martial character of the book has given him an opportunity to his liking.

Maud and Misha Petersham have provided illustrations for "Twenty-Four Unusual Stories," a volume by Anna Cogswell Tyler of the New York Public Library, and have again demonstrated their ability to make decorations entirely adequate to the spirit of the best of children's literature. The Petershams's work in black and white and their drawings will bear comparison with that of the best illustrators in the field. The wide variety of the stories collected for the book has given them another interesting opportunity.

Colored illustrations by Willy Pogany have been added to the black and white drawings on the transfer of Padraic Colum's "King of Ireland's Son" from the Holt imprint to Macmillan. This must be considered one of the most satisfactory of recent children's books in the beauty of its general composition, having full page plates, text illustrations, interesting initials in old Celtic form, the whole being in perfect harmony with the text.

A 12mo of beautiful appearance in the balance of the pages, title heads and the title page is William McFee's "Harbour of Memory," Doubleday, Page & Company. The book has been dedicated to Christopher Morley, "My first pilot into the ports of American journalism."

A new book, not of American manufacture but important because it deserves a place on the reference shelves of those interested in the finer aspects of book manufacture, is "The Art of Illustration," by Edmund J. Sullivan, imported by Scribner. This is an octavo, very fully illustrated, with examples of the finest work in book illustration, and having among other chapters those with such headings as "Authors and Illustrations," "Children's Books," "The Use of Models," etc.

A fine illustrated book for child or grown-up is Dickens's "Tale of Two Cities," illustrated by Harvey Dunn, published by Cosmopolitan. It is worthy to take its place beside their beautiful "Robinson Crusoe" along with other books in this illustrated field. The pictures by Dunn have been very successful, the cover itself being one that would start any young person to reading the book, or adult reader, for that matter.

Rackham has made the illustrations for Milton's "Comus," published by Doubleday, Page & Company, and they are in his best vein, black and white as well as full color plates.

The full gilt cover on "Zodiac Town" by Turner, published by Atlantic, is a very attractive feature in days when gilt designs are not frequently indulged in, and the end papers and silhouette in blue tint are very happy. This children's book adds another to the Atlantic's successful experiments in this field.

Huebsch has made a very attractive volume out of "The Triumph of the Egg" by Sherwood Anderson. The photographs of sculpture in the front, however, seem to bear no happy structural relation to the rest of the book.

A volume worthy to stand beside "Old Junk" is Tomlinson's "London River," also from Knopf.

An experiment very consistently carried out and with happy results is "Clifford and John's Almanac," published by Reilly & Lee. Clifford Raymond is responsible for the text and John T. McCutcheon for the drawings, which are quite in the old almanac style. The typography has been very nicely adapted to the needs of the occasion.

Adventures of a Bookseller

THE British invasion of 1921—in which the pen proved mightier than the sword—had brought a steady stream of English novelists to Bigtown, most of whom found their theme in a survey of American Letters. In no case was American literature attacked, quite the contrary; in fact, the praise was so unstinted that it began to take on the tone of an epitaph, and it soon became apparent that American Letters were being “killed by kindness”—smothered by patronage. The phrase: “America must look to the future” seemed to indicate she had no past, and the eternal reference to “English tradition” by these men from an intangible resentment grew up within his breast. So, by the time Sir Jonible arrived in Bigtown to address the Literati on the “Ignorance of the Educated” friend Ondeck was ripe for another tea party.

Upon the morning following Sir Jonible’s lecture, Mr. Ondeck came to his work in a brighter frame of mind than he had known for some time and greeted Miss Vampet with, “Hello there, bright-eyes, how dost, this morning?”

“Dust,” said Miss Vampet, seizing upon the word, “Is the very thing I wish to call to thy attention. You and I will have to dust this table or sell this year’s volumes for antiques.”

Mr. Ondeck agreed readily enough, so they each got a small box to sit upon, and proceeded to dust, the method of procedure being to remove two books, slap them together, rub out the space they occupied with a cloth, then replace them.

“By the way,”—slap, slap—said Miss Vampet, “Did you go to the lecture last night?”

“Guilty,” answered he—bing bang.

“Oh do tell me”—slap—“How you liked it?” slap slap.

“Great!” he exclaimed.

“And what did he talk about?”

“The Ignorance of the Educated!”—slap bang—“Kerchew!! Yes, he proved that paradox conclusively . . . but I doubt if he realizes it.”

Miss Vampet cast him a hasty glance, then burst out laughing.

“Ho,” she exclaimed, “I imagine it was over your head.”

“It was!” he enthusiastically agreed.

Miss Vampet slapped away in silent reflection for a moment, then said,

“He is supposed to be quite a humorist. Wasn’t he funny?”

“I don’t know,” he replied. “A few people laughed, but then some people applaud a reputation, you know.”

“Well, old dear,” said she, “To be frank with you, these English chappies bore me—I simply can’t read them.”

“Nor I,” said he.

Later along in the morning, Sir Jonible himself sauntered into the Bookstore, and Mr. Ondeck advanced to meet him.

“Can we help you sir?” he asked.

The great man picked up a volume and opening it, adjusted his glasses.

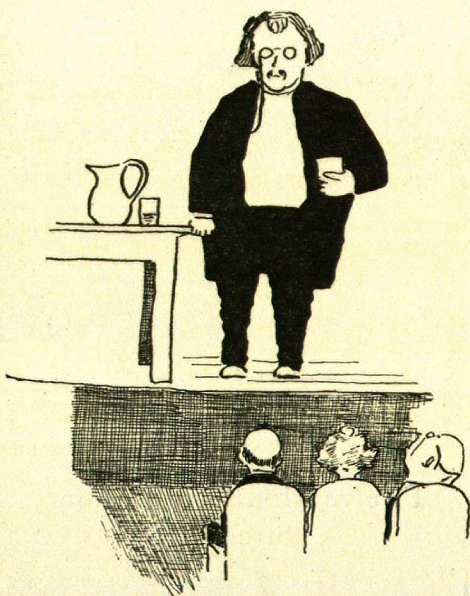

“Just looking about,” said he.

Mr. Ondeck was about to withdraw, when Sir Jonible said,

“Aw—by the weh.”

Mr. Ondeck returned and stood attention while the invader read for a moment in the book he had opened.

“By the weh,” he said at last, “I spoke to

across the sea seemed to leave our provincial art quite nude.

As a matter of duty, Mr. Ondeck, of the Bigtown Bookstore attended all these lectures, and found therein much food for thought, and soon began to ask himself very seriously whether America really had a Literature. Was there such a thing as an American classic? Were such names as Twain, Hawthorne, Emerson, Irving, merely of the moment, or were they indeed of the elect? Was Longfellow then an upstart who had dared to raise his voice in sacred halls, and O. Henry a piker who had borrowed his plumage? It would seem so, and altho Mr. Ondeck was no pen-pusher and dwelt in sweet obscurity, yet he felt himself to be an integral part of American Letters by virtue of his connection with the Bookstore, and slowly your Mr. Bigboss lost night about a list of books I particuleh want—ah, representative contemptry American Litrateure, ya know. Will you kindly see if he has it ready naow?"

"Certainly," said Ondeck, and hastened away to the balcony where Mr. Bigboss kept his desk.

Mr. Bigboss had the list ready, and as he handed it to Ondeck, said,

"What do you think of the selection, Ondeck?"

Ondeck glanced hastily over it, and upon seeing such names as George Ade, Frank Spearman, Edith Wharton, Henry Van Dyke, Joseph Lincoln, etc., smiled to himself.

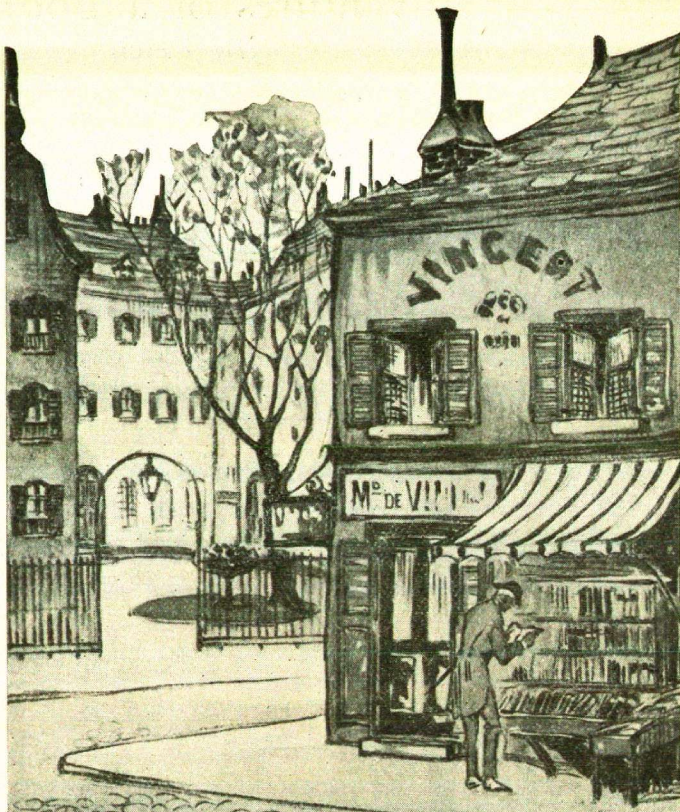

"Very good list, Mr. Bigboss," said he. "But really, don't you think they'll be over his head?"

Appleton Wins First Prize at Advertising Convention

AT the Direct Advertising Convention held at Springfield, Massachusetts, October 25th-28th, D. Appleton & Company were awarded the first prize, a silver cup, for the most unique direct advertising campaign projected this year.

The feature which brought the cup to Appleton was the special advertising campaign for the new novel, "Helen of the Old House," by Harold Bell Wright, which included among other features a phonograph record made by Wright himself in which he read a selection from the novel. The display presented by Appleton showed the record, the window display material, feature stories for newspapers, sales helps, etc. Several thousand advertising experts from all parts of the country attended the Convention. The competition was keen, some of the country's largest advertisers in other lines being among the exhibitors.

The Direct Advertising Cup is the fourth prize which D. Appleton & Company have won this year. In June Edith Wharton's novel, "The Age of Innocence," was awarded the Pulitzer prize as the best novel of the year by the School of Journalism at Columbia University; Zona Gale's play, "Miss Lulu Bett," was awarded the prize as the best play of the year at the same time; and Prof. H. L. Hollingworth's "Psychology of Functional Neurosis" was awarded the silver Nicholas Murray Butler medal.

Twelve Months of "Main Street"

THE current advertising of Harcourt, Brace & Company is pointing out that October 23rd was the first anniversary of the publication of "Main Street," a best seller and that the year has taken the sales well over 300,000 copies. It can hardly be said that this was slow in taking hold, but publishers estimate that out of the first 50,000 copies, which was all that was sold in 1920, about 40,000 were absorbed in or near New York City, where as they correctly state "there is the greatest aggregation of those who come from 'Main Street.'" Perhaps the most interesting thing about this book is the way the name has quickly penetrated into common speech, and whether it be in an editorial, general article or in everyday conversation, the references to Main Street, Gopher Prairie or Carol Kennicott are understood by everybody. Editions have been sold in England, Canada and Australia. The play, dramatized by Harriett Ford and Harvey O'Higgins, is now running at the New National Theater in New York.

Among the Publishers

A Week's Gleanings of Book-trade News

FRANK SHAY sends word that hereafter all trade orders for his publications should be sent to Stewart-Kidd Co., Cincinnati, O.

"A BOOK OF WOMEN'S VERSE," edited with a prefatory essay by J. C. Squire, is announced by the Oxford University Press American Branch. The volume contains 179 poems by 89 women.

"SINCE the coltish rejuvenescence of The Bookman," says F. P. A. in the New York Tribune, "under the editorship of twenty-five-year-old Mr. John Farrar, its name, Old Frank Hackett thinks, should be changed to The Bookboy."

CURRENT English trade paper advertisements announce that Heinemann has sold out completely his allotment of 1000 sets of the Vailima Edition of Stevenson. Both the English and American editions are being printed at Garden City.

THE emphatic quality of movie publicity makes most book advertising sound tame not to say timid. The Metro Picture Corporation, in advertising "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," states "the cast interpreting the rôles in the most widely read book of all time, excepting the Bible," etc.

THE visit of Marshal Foch to America revives interest in the personality of the Generalissimo of the Allied Forces in the World War. Clara Laughlin's "Foch the Man," published first on Armistice Day, November 11th, 1918, by Revell, has run thru several editions, and a new one is now ready.

MISS ANGELA MORGAN has had the honor to be appointed by the League of American Pen Women to write the poem to be specially dedicated to the memory of the "unknown soldier" which was read at Arlington on Armistice Day, November 11th. Miss Morgan is widely known as the author of "Forward, March!" "Hail, Man!" etc.

"MY MAIDEN EFFORT," edited by Gelett Burgess and collected by the Authors' League of America to aid their fund for needy authors, was published by Doubleday, Page & Company on October 24th. In it twenty-five members of the League have written personal confessions of their first literary experience, amusing histories of early attempts at the writing game. Ellis Parker Butler confesses that for his first magazine story he was paid fifty cents—all in penny postcards; Stewart Edward White asked cash for his first story for fear the editor would change his mind and stop payment on his check, and Rupert Hughes began his career with didactic poetry entitled "Be Kind!" and felt worse about it than if he had had the mumps.

THE latest addition to America's growing knowledge of one of her greatest men is Holloway's "Uncollected Poetry and Prose of Walt Whitman." (Doubleday, Page.)

THE prize of $100 offered by Mrs. Edgar Speyer of New York, thru the Poetry magazine, for the work of a young poet was awarded to Hazel Hall, the author of "Curtains" recently published by John Lane.

"The Old Soak," created by Don Marquis for the "Sun Dial" in the New York Sun, who later appeared in book form, published by Doubleday, is now to have a stage career, and The Old Soak Company has been duly incorporated for that purpose.

A FRENCH edition of "Pollyanna"; The Glad Book, is to be brought out at once under the imprint of J. H. Jeheber, Geneva, Switzerland, by special arrangement with The Page Company (Boston), the publishers. "Pollyanna" has already been translated into the Swedish, Norwegian, Japanese and Dutch languages.

A NEW YORK State Library questionnaire taking a vote of the librarians of twelve leading children's libraries as to the best children's books published in 1920 showed eleven out of twelve replies placing at the top of the list Hugh Lofting's "Story of Doctor Dolittle" (Stokes). Miss Annie Carroll Moore, Children's Librarian of the New York Public Library, calls it "the most original story of last year's books for children." A series of nursery pastels by Hugh Lofting, author and illustrator of "The Story of Doctor Dolittle," were exhibited at the Brown Robertson Galleries, 415 Madison Avenue, during Children's Book Week.

It is not often that a critic and writer of the reputation of H. M. Tomlinson, Literary Editor of the London Spectator, and author of "Old Junk," is found giving such unqualified praise to any book as is seen in his article on Melville's book in the Literary Review. Mr. Tomlinson's statement is as follows: "I do not know whether Americans are aware of the position of their Melville as a writer, but I find it difficult to write of his great book within measure, for I have no doubt 'Moby Dick' goes into that small company of big, extravagant, generative books which have made other writers fertile in all ages—I mean the books we cannot classify, but which must be read by every man who writes—'Gargantua and Pantagruel,' 'Don Quixote,' 'Gulliver's Travels,' 'Tristram Shandy,' and the 'Pickwick Papers.' That is where 'Moby Dick' is, and it is therefore as important a creative effort as America has made in her history."

Crowell who was engaged in the bookbinding business in Boston, and afterwards in publishing in New York. Mr. Crowell occupied a responsible position, became a partner, and was active in the affairs of his concern until ten years ago when he retired. Mr. Crowell possessed a genial disposition, and an unusual faith in Divine guidance. He was greatly interested in religious matters, and was a member of the Union Congregational Church of Boston at the time of his death. Editor, PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY:

Please let me thank you for your rare book number, which is one of the finest things I have ever seen. It will be a great help to all rare book dealers. My good friend, Mr. Hopkins, deserves a special vote of thanks in this number.

Mr. Wetmore Retires

LANSING G. WETMORE, senior partner of Scrantom, Wetmore & Company, and one of the founders of the firm, has retired this month from business after fifty-three years of active association. Mr. Wetmore will spend some time in travel, believing that he has earned the right to rest and retirement.

This famous Rochester firm, one of the best known in the country in the book and stationery field, was opened in 1868 by two young men, both of whom had been clerks in the book and stationery store of Steele & Avery. Elbert Henry Scrantom died in 1905. Another partner, Albert C. Walker, came into the business in 1870 and now, on Mr. Wetmore retiring, becomes the senior member of the new firm. After Mr. Scrantom's death in 1905, Joshua T. Gorsline, who had been manager of the office, was admitted as partner and with

Mr. Walker continues the firm's business. The store had a very steady growth, several moves into larger quarters being necessitated until it is using the large space now occupied, with entrances on both Main and State Streets.

Mr. Wetmore, in spite of his business activities, found time to take an important part in the civic development of Rochester, being actively connected with the Chamber of Commerce both as Trustee and Vice President, and for many years serving on the Retail Trade Committee. He has also been connected with the Memorial Art Gallery, Rochester Historical Society, Academy of Science, etc. His son, Lansing S. Wetmore, who has been connected with the firm, retires at the same time.

Rare Books, Autographs and Prints

ETCHINGS by Whistler, Haden, Zorn, Lepere, McBey, Louis Orr, and others are being shown at the Brown-Robertson Galleries.

The first exhibition of the season at the Weyhe Gallery consisting of etchings, lithographs and drawings by J. L. Forain will be on view until November 12.

The New York Public Library announces a memorial exhibition of the etchings of Charles Meryon for November, the bulk of the prints having been drawn from the Avery collection and supplemented by loans.

The current number of the Print Collector's Quarterly contains the second instalment of Herbert Furst's discussion of the modern woodcut, in which the younger generation is put firmly and delicately in its place among its peers of the past.

The centenary of the birth of the Russian novelist, Fedor Dostoevski, occurred on October 30, and may be said to have been celebrated in this country by the completion of the translation of his novels by Mrs. Constance Garnett.

The Biblio in its October issue prints a list of American and British authors whose first editions are advertised for in the "books wanted" departments of the trade papers. The summary of those most in demand, as indicated by the number of times they were advertised for from June 15 to September 15 shows the ten leading authors to have been as follows: Cabell, 108; Twain, 72; Saltus, 54; Melville, 50; Conrad, 47; Mencken, 38; Roosevelt, 37; Bierce, 30 and Masefield, 29.

The very keen interest in the first editions of modern authors, especially of the younger English group, makes the "Bibliography of Modern Authors" by Henry Danielson, published in this country by James F. Drake of this city, indispensable to the collector in this field. The editor has personally inspected all of the books described with the exception of two pamphlets and has given full collations including careful descriptions of original bindings. The volume is a handsome octavo of 211 pages and contains up-to-date bibliographies of Max Beerbohm, Rupert Brooke, Hubert Crackanthorpe, Walter de la Mare, John Drinkwater, Lord Dunsany, James McElroy Flecker, George Gissing, Francis Ledwidge, Compton Mackenzie, John Masefield, Leonard Merrick, Richard Middleton, Arthur Symons, and Hugh Walpole. There are six facsimile reproductions of title-pages.

A bronze tablet to the memory of Stephen Crane, born in Newark, November 4, 1871, will be unveiled on the front wall of the Newark Free Library. Crane's achievement in literature is lauded on the tablet as follows. "Inscribed to the Memory of Stephen Crane, born in Newark November 4, 1871. He attained, before his untimely death, June 5, 1900, international fame as a writer of fiction. His novel 'The Red Badge of Courage,' set a model for succeeding writers on the emotions of men in battle. His verse and his delightful stories of boyhood anticipated strong later tendencies in American literature. The power of his work won for him the admiration of a wide circle of readers and critics." The tablet was provided by the Schoolmen's Club, assisted by the pupils of the Newark Public Schools, and will be unveiled November 7 in commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the author's birth.

The New York Herald, in writing of the ceremonies, says:

"The Schoolmen's Club is to be congratulated. There has never been sufficient recognition of Stephen Crane's genius in America. If the reading we have done is anything to go by, Crane has received more genuine appreciation in England than in America. He belongs to that impressive list of neglected American writers that includes H. C. Bunner, Richard Hovey, Frank Stockton and other outstanding figures.

"The celebration in Newark is a healthy sign. The participation of children in the raising of the fund is a splendid thing. It is time our school children were made aware of the fact that there is something in American literature besides 'Evangeline,' 'Thanatopsis' and 'The Barefoot Boy.'"

The death of Frederick Morris, of this city, Friday, October 20, at his home was shockingly sudden. On Monday and Tuesday of the same week he attended the opening sale at Anderson's and executed his commissions as usual. For about forty years Mr. Morris had been a regular attendant at book auctions. No other person in this country ever equalled this period nor rivalled the constancy of his attendance. Many important libraries, dealers and collectors were among his clients. He has never been surpassed for thoro efficiency in this field—that is, for knowledge of values, careful preparation and keen attention to the execution of his bids. His clients always felt safe in his hands for he was the soul of honor and trustworthiness. He had had a great opportunity for observation, possessed a retentive memory, and was a good conversationalist and could tell of many interesting experiences in his long service. He will be sorely missed, for every one had taken friendly interest in him, especially in recent years when it was apparent that his health was failing. The sympathy of a wide circle of the trade and collectors will go to his family in their irreparable loss.

An autograph letter written on April 20, 1824, by Lord Byron's valet, a man named Fletcher, said to be the "stout yeoman" of

"Childe Harold," has recently been privately printed in London. Apparently Fletcher was unlettered and his only desire was to tell the truth. He said that Byron had his first convulsive fit February 15, and altho it lasted only fifteen minutes it was a warning and the poet began a starvation diet. In the early days of April he was seized with another fit and a slow fever after which he asked for a Bible. "On April 10 his lordship had violent pains in his bones, but he did not omit his daily ride, in the course of which he got a wetting and returned with a high fever. The valet urged him to send for a doctor, who lived eighty miles away, but Byron replied: "I shall be dead or better before the doctor comes." The valet then tells how four Italian physicians came and bled him, taking eight ounces of blood, of which he observes: "I saw his blood had gone into such a state of inflammation that there was not more than an ounce of real blood in the eight. After an interval of delirium came April 18, when my lordship began to make sure of his speedy dissolution." Fletcher originally was a farm hand and served Lord Byron twenty years. After the poet's death he returned to England and opened a shop near Berkeley Square, but went into bankruptcy and retired on an annual allowance of £70 granted him by Mrs. Leigh. He was buried near his master at Hucknall Torkard, near Newstead Abbey.

The library of Rita Wellman Leo of this city, consisting of early and modern English literature was sold at the Anderson Galleries, October 26, 331 lots bringing $18,881.25. This sale was regarded as in a measure a test of market conditions for rarities and the result was quite as good as could have been expected. It was well attended, bidding at times was spirited, and an encouraging degree of interest was manifested. Lathrop C. Harper paid $2,950 for the small octavo volume of Shakespeare's "Poems" of 1640, and the Brick Row Bookshop $1450 for the Second Folio. Other important items and the prices which they brought were the following: Bacon's "Advancement of Learning," 1605, $100; the first folio of Beaumont and Fletcher, 1647, $330; the first edition in English of Boccaccio's "Decameron," 3 vols., 1620-25, $1,400; Butler's "Hudibras," 3 vols., 1663-78, $135; Burton's "Anatomy of Melancholy," 1621, $300; Coryat's "Crudities," 1611, $325; the first metrical translation in English of Virgil's "Aeneid," 1533, $350; Drayton's "Poly-Olbion," 2 vols., 1613-22, $140; Fletcher's "Purple Island," 1633, $112.50; Goldsmith's "Vicar of Wakefield," 2 vols., 1766, $800, and "She Stoops to Conquer," 1773, $175; John Heyward's "The Spider and the Fly," 1556, $340; Thomas Heyward's "The Phoenix of these Late Times," 1637, $200; the first folio of Ben Jonson, 2 vols., 1616-40, $345; Langland's "Vision of Pierce Plowman," 1550, $240; the first English translation of Rabelais, 5 vols. v. d. $255; a rare edition of the Tonsion edition of Shakespeare, 43 vols., 1734-35, $320; Sheridan's "The Rival Beauties," (1772) $110; Spenser's "Faerie Queene," 2 vols., 1590-96, the Huth copy of the first issue of the first edition, $975; and Walton's Compleat Angler," 1661, third edition, $145. There was a collection of about fifty volumes of first editions of John Masefield, some of which brought high prices. Considerable interest was shown, too, in a long run of Riverside Press Special Editions.
